“ When I heard of Andy's passing on April Fool's Day I cried and cried, "How perfect?!". Then I raised my fist to the sky and yelled, "You bastard! Rest in peace, you mother!"

That man was rich, so very, very rich and I can't begin to express the gratitude I feel for having known him. He opened my young mind and hanging around him was probably better than any college education. He knew about a lot of different stuff and opened windows for me to explore that I never knew were there. I loved how he thought the whole world was pretty stupid and beautiful.

Love, for Andy

Nothing but

The Best

It was a gift to know Andy. While often he would agitate it was the spirit of love and caring. I'm a better person thanks to his actions. The journey continues and the experience moves on.

See you on the other side!

Your dad had such a presence! I'll never forget graduation day, him standing behind me in the crowd, as we watched you graduate from college. He truly always asked how I was doing, how Josie was doing and eventually the convo would turn to fun things like decorating 😂 or he'd have some related story or opinion or gems of wisdom to share. I always liked Andy and I'm sure he's missed by many, many people. The Dude is OK and will live on in the stories we share. HUGS Jackie and family! ❤️ U!
